It was the administrative and religious center of the chavin culture, built and occupied approximately between the years 1500-300 BC (Andean formative). Their structures, shape of a truncated pyramid, are built with stone and mortar of mud. The most imposing structure is known as "The Castle", also called "Templo Mayor" or "New temple". It is an outstanding example of the art of building of the ancient Peruvians by the high degree of perfection reached in the field of engineering, in the carving and polished stones and lito it sculpture associated with its architecture. Despite not being the archaeological site oldest, largest or the most colorful of the ancient Peru, Chavin de Huantar is regarded as the most important center of peregrination of the Andean world and, according to Luis Guillermo Lumbreras, a synthesis of the previous experiences developed in the coast, mountains and jungle, as well as one of the earliest evidence of civilization in America.

The building presents a complex network of roads and stone interior galleries only illuminated by beams of light that penetrate through strategically prepared ducts. Inside can still see the Lanzón monolith, carved stone of 4,54 m in height in which can be seen represented an anthropomorphic divinity, possibly the most important of the Chavín pantheon. On the walls of the main temple, you could see a series of cabezas clavadas, sculptural lumps officiating apparently mythological guardians of the temple; currently, only one of them remains at its original site. Transfer to the Hotel. Accommodation.
